

RioTinto

Mining Indaba

Bold Baatar

Changes in geopolitics, disruptive technology and emphasis on sustainability - are reshaping our industry

A photograph of three young women sitting at a wooden table in what appears to be a classroom or meeting room. They are all smiling and looking down at their notebooks, which they are holding and writing in with blue pens. The woman in the center is wearing glasses and a green sweater. The woman on the right is wearing a white shirt with colorful geometric patterns. The woman on the left has braided hair and is wearing a light blue shirt. The background is slightly blurred, showing other people and a window.

How we adapt, operationalise and integrate sustainability will define successful mining companies in the years ahead

At Rio Tinto we supply the materials essential to building a low carbon economy

71% of our electricity comes from renewable sources, including hydro

The purpose of business is “to help and solve societal problems profitably” — Sir Paul Collier

What if, we collectively pooled our resources for communities?

...Learn, unlearn and relearn

For the mining industry, our very existence depends on trust

A photograph of three workers in high-visibility yellow and blue shirts, dark pants, and white hard hats standing on a dirt path in a dense, green forest. The worker on the right is gesturing with both hands raised, while the other two listen. The scene is brightly lit, suggesting a sunny day.

We strongly believe in forming partnerships based on the principles of shared purpose